LOGLINE

Every day, four co-workers eat lunch.

SYNOPSIS

In this surrealist comedy, four co-workers convene in the breakroom of their nondescript office. And only ever talk about their lunch. Well sometimes they talk about Ric, the guy that was fired, and who they hope gets the death penalty. But mostly they talk about the store with the sandwiches Roger likes. Or if Tomás finally remembered his soup in the cupboard.

OUR STORY

You know those ideas you have right before you fall asleep? They are super creative and the best ideas you ever had, but then when you wake up in the morning, you've totally forgotten them? That was how Lunch. was born. But this time, it wasn't forgotten. The next day, Lunch. was written over a few hours while eating pizza at Desano's pizza place. It was so simple, and so weird, all we needed was a tiny break room to shoot it in. When a friend of a friend gave us access to the breakroom at his factory, we knew we could make this surreal little short happen. The break room was cramped. The angles were hard. But the worst part of the entire shoot, by far was the actual lunch. No one wants to eat Zap 'ems. No one.
